KING CHARMING; OR, THE BLUE BIRD OF PARADISE: [burlesque] Txt Adapt/Mus. [n/e]

An extravaganza-style burlesque with local allusions adapted from J. R. Planché's King Charming; Or, The Blue Bird of Paradise (1850), the Sydney Morning Herald's critic records that "'impossible' kind which defies analysis, and is all the more pleasant from its very many incongruous absurdities." He or she goes on to note: From Henpekt the Hundredth to the fairy Soussio (with the marvelously ugly nose), each character contributes [their] quota to the general mirth afforded by the story of the loves of young King Charming and the Princess Florina" (6 Jan. 1860, 5).

JACK THE GIANT KILLER: [pantomime] Lib Adapt. George Scott Hough; Mus. [n/e]

Adapted from H. J. Byron's extravaganza Jack the Giant Killer; Or, Harlequin King Arthur and Ye Knights of Ye Round Table (1859), this production contained numerous local allusions. The narrative, which has been dovetailed with the legend of King Arthur, sees Jack knighted by the king and given a mission to slaughter giants. Jack's zeal for the mission is given added incentive when his betrothed, Sybil, is carried off by the giant, Gorgibuster. When Jack arrives at the giant's home he is received hospitably by Gorgibuster, who intends to dispatch his guest during the night. Jack tricks the giant by placing a jack boot in his bed and hiding elsewhere. When the giant strikes the bed with his club he believes he has killed young Jack. The hero meanwhile rouses the servants, rescues Sybil and together they attack Gorgibuster, bringing him to an ignominious end at the point of pitchforks and umbrellas. The final incident, prior to the traditional transformation scene, has the escapees enter a cave filled with burnished gold, fountains and nymphs. The pantomime also finished with the traditional harlequinade (this time with a double cast of characters).

Two Jack the Giant Killer pantomimes were staged simultaneously in Melbourne. The other production (lasting only seven nights) was put on at the Princess's Theatre by the Marsh Family Troupe.

- 1860: Royal Pantheon, Cremorne Gardens, Melbourne; 26 Dec. 1860

LITTLE JACK HORNER, THE ORIGINAL HERO OF THE CORNER; OR, THE FAIRY COOKS OF OUR CHRISTMAS PIE: [pantomime] Lib Adapt. W. M. Akhurst; Mus. [n/e]

Also referred to as: Little Jack Horner (the original Hero of the Corner); or, Harlequin Ignorance and the Magic Mince Pie, the topical jokes and characters referred to such issues as the "recent political changes, the composition of the cabinet, the loquacity of our legislators, the irregularities of the telegraphic system, the contemplated formation of street railways, the progress of exploration, Australian-servant-galism [etc]." The plot is described in the Argus as involving the triumph of Fairy Progressa by the "introduction into curriculum of instruction in applied sciences, and other subjects until recently regarded as heterodox by those presiding over the old seats of learning" (4). The story is possibly adapted from E. L. Blanchard's Little Jack Horner (1857).

The Argus notes that a number of business establishments in the city found their place among the scenes in the harlequinade. Notable were: The Cremorne (featuring its rotunda), Coppin's XXX and the Collingwood Gas Company (27 Dec. 1860, 5). Bell's Life in Victoria also mentions the Melbourne terminus of the St Kilda railway, the Monster Clothing Mart, and the exterior of Harry Jenkins' (29 Dec. 1860, 2).

PILGRIM OF LOVE; OR, HARLEQUIN PRINCE AHMED, THE TALKING COCKATOO AND THE ENCHANTED HORSE: [pantomime] Lib Adapt/Mus. [n/e]

Said to have been based on Washington Irving's Alhambra Legends, but more likely to have been adapted from H. J. Byron's extravaganza The Pilgrim of Love (1860).

[NB: Another similarly titled pantomime The Pilgrim of Love; Or, The Parrot and the Princess was staged in 1868. The authorship of that version is also unknown, and hence it is unclear if any relationship exists between the two.
