Entry Properties

TITLE; [year of pfm]; genre; author (if known); troupe/management or company; (location); date; miscellaneous information

Authorship of these works is often unclear, particularly in instances when they are revised in later years. An example of this is "Muldoon's Picnic" which is known to have been staged in the USA as early as 1880. In Australia the earliest productions appear to have been credited to F. M. Clark - although he is almost certainly not the original author of the farce. How much he (and others after him) changed their revivals is unclear - but given the propensity of minstrel and vaudeville performers to insert their own comic business into works, it is likely that these works were constantly being reinterpreted.

If known the individual(s) who wrote or adapted the work is provided. In some instances the person who most likely wrote or adapted it is given authorship credit.
